

KEEP IT SIMPLE

Written By

Andrew Yan

INT. BEDROOM - TWILIGHT

RIVEN(20), tall, skinny, slumps over a desk, asleep. A dim lamp shines and reflects off of him subtly.

BEEP, BEEP, BEEP. The alarm clock reads 6:00 A.M. He stirs. Slowly opening his eyes, and reaches out to shut it off gently.

EXT. SIDEWALK - SUNRISE

Riven walks up the street he has been on a hundred times. The world seems still. Still for the moment.

He passes by a steep dirt hill. His pace slows. He stops at the base of a dirt path. A slightly worn one.

Riven looks up, remembering. He heads up.

EXT. GRASSY HILL - CONTINUOUS

Riven sits down between patches of grass bent conveniently as the wind brushes past him calmly. He watches as the sky, soft with the sun peeking out from behind the distant mountains.

EVA

Do you think we would still remember each other?

The camera pans over, revealing Eva(16), sitting beside him. Riven now looks younger. The same age as Eva.

RIVEN

Probably... but in ten years or so?

EVA

Yeah, I'd probably be like... There was this kid. Thought he was kinda cute.

RIVEN

Thought?

EVA

Mhm. Kinda weird too.

Riven looks over at Eva.

EVA (CONT'D)

Like... eating apples with a spoon.
Said it needed less commitment than normal.

RIVEN

It is though. You can just pause halfway.

Eva looks back at Riven. She just smiles.

The moment lingers. The wind stirs, lifting their hair ever so slightly and blowing it against the sun. In the distance, the sun rises a bit more.

In the distance, almost inaudible at first, a high pitched WHINE begins. Barely audible... growing.

EVA

Still... I'd like to think I will remember you. Life gets all loud and noisy--

The soft WHINE becomes a SCREECH. A rising howl of tires losing grip.

RIVEN looks down the empty street. He gets up.

He starts to run, faster and faster. Fragments of her of them begin to flicker through his head.

A voice. A laugh.

The hill.

The spoon.

The screech.