

keep it simple.

INT. BEDROOM - EARLY MORNING

RIVEN is slumped over a desk with a dim lamp on, asleep.

BEEP BEEP BEEP.

The alarm clock reads 6:00 A.M. He stirs. Slowly opens his eyes.
Reaches out and shuts it off gently.

EXT. STREETS - EARLY MORNING

RIVEN walks outside on a street he's been on a hundred times.

The world seems still. Cool blue light.

He passes a steep dirt hill. His pace slows. He stops at the base of a familiar path. He looks up at it. Remembering.

He heads up.

EXT. HILL - CONTINUOUS

RIVEN reaches the top.

The wind brushes past him. The sky is soft with sunrise.

He slowly sits on a patch of dirt conveniently bent in familiar places.

He watches the sun rise.

EVA

do you think... we would still remember each other?

Camera pans over, revealing the two side by side, but RIVEN now seems significantly younger.

RIVEN

probably, but like in ten years or so?

EVA

yeah... i'd be like, 'there was this kid. thought he was kinda cute.'

RIVEN

thought?

EVA

mhm. kinda weird too.

(beat)

RIVEN
how?

EVA
like... eating apples with a spoon? said it was less commitment.

RIVEN
(defensive)
it is less commitment. You can just pause halfway.

EVA
(grinning)
exactly my point.

The moment lingers. The wind stirs. The sun rises a little more.
In the distance — almost imperceptible at first — a high-pitched whine begins.
Barely audible... growing.

EVA
still... i'd like to think i will remember you. life gets all loud and nois--

The soft whine becomes a SCREECH. A rising howl of tires losing grip.
RIVEN looks down the empty street. He gets up. Starts to run, going faster and faster. Fragments of her — of them — begin to flicker through his mind. A laugh. Her voice. The hill. The spoon."